FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

THIS BOOK IS A MUST for anyone who must deal with these complicated and changeable regulations. The costs of being wrong in this industry are staggering!

The Food and Drug Administration's regulatory powers have expanded dramatically within the last decade. Many more firms are now confronted with FDA problems and with critical short-term problems which call for fast, accurate answers. The first volume of Shepard's Regulatory Manual Series focuses on the federal governments' busiest and most powerful product regulatory bureaucracy—the FDA.

Until now, the massive body of Food and Drug Administration law and practice has been hard to follow because new information develops almost overnight into significant regulatory concerns. Advertising, product design, development, testing manufacturing and marketing problems abound for the unwary. In this one volume work, an experienced food and drug specialist has brought together all the information you need to know today to meet the challenge of regulation in the 1980's.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW—INDIANAPOLIS

It is a pleasure to write this article dedicating this issue of the Indiana Law Review to my good friend Frank T. Read, the new Dean of the Indiana University School of Law—Indianapolis and formerly the Dean of the University of Tulsa School of Law.

The first time I met Frank was soon after he had assumed the duties as Dean of the University of Tulsa School of Law. He was speaking to a luncheon meeting of Tulsa's alumni of which I am a member. I was greatly impressed with the Dean's energy and enthusiasm to make our school a leading law school in this region. In my opinion he has succeeded. From my observation of him and in discussing the school and its administration with others interested in the Law School at Tulsa University, Dean Read impressed all of us with his ability as both an educator and an administrator. The University of Tulsa School of Law is much better for his leadership. He will be sorely missed.

In addition to his work as Dean at Tulsa University, Frank devoted himself extensively to the continuing education of Oklahoma's lawyers and judges by his writings on law matters and lecturing at various seminars conducted under the CLE program sponsored by the Oklahoma Bar Association. He will be missed in the future efforts of the bar to keep sharp the skills of our practicing attorneys and sitting judges.

We of the Oklahoma bench and bar are grateful for having had Frank Read in our midst during the time he spent here in Oklahoma and he knows that he goes to Indiana with our most fond wishes and hope for his continued success. I know he will make a fine Dean at the Indiana University School of Law—Indianapolis.
